

TRIBUNAL CLAIMS OVER CONTRACTS OF EMPLOYMENT TREBLE

Tribunal claims brought against employers for failing to provide contracts of employment have trebled since last year.

The latest figures from The Employment Tribunal, released by the Ministry of Justice, show a 186% hike in cases lodged against employers for ‘failing to provide a written statement of main terms/contract of employment’.

The figures relate to the second quarter of 2023, when a total of 23,693 claims were received by The Employment Tribunal.

Failure to provide a written contract saw the highest increase compared to the same period last year; with ‘breach of contract’ in second place (up 103%), followed by ‘failure to inform and consult on TUPE’ (up 54%), and ‘unauthorised deductions from wages’ (up 48%).

HR Team Co-Director, Martina McAuley, says the increase in claims surrounding contracts of employment is a signal to employers to ensure that all contracts are legally in place and up to date.

“This could be an indication that employees are now, more than ever, aware of their rights due to ever-increasing ready availability of information.”

“It is a legal requirement that every employee is given a contract of employment and therefore it is imperative that employers ensure every employee has a fully signed contract in place.

“However, more than just a legal requirement, providing clear and up to date contracts of employment is important in attracting and retaining employees,” she adds.

Ms McAuley says the rise in claims is “highly significant”, adding the recent high profile of employee rights in traditional and social media in recent years may be a factor.

“This could be an indication that employees are now, more than ever, aware of their rights due to ever-increasing ready availability of information.”

She advises that recent changes in the employment legislation should be appropriately accounted for in contracts of employment.

“2023 has been a busy year for employment legislation with a host of new laws passed – including the Carer’s Leave Act 2023 which will provide unpaid carers the right to up to five days’ leave per year.

“Many of these new laws will not come into effect until 2024 at the earliest, but it is recommended that employers ensure their contracts and employee handbooks are ready for these changes.”

Failure to provide a statement of main terms/contract of employment can be costly for employers as the maximum compensation is £2,572 per employee in Great Britain, and £2,676 in Northern Ireland.

Among the new figures for tribunal claims lodged were unfair dismissal (4,083), unauthorised deduction from wages (6,161), breach of contract (5,786), failure to provide a written statement of main terms/contract of employment (1,422); redundancy pay (1,086); and sex discrimination (857).

FIVE THINGS EVERY EMPLOYER SHOULD BE AWARE OF

In the employment landscape, employers shoulder a significant responsibility for their businesses' success and their workforce's well-being. From legal obligations to fostering a supportive environment, there are five fundamental areas every employer should be acutely aware of.

These crucial aspects span employment laws, workplace safety, diversity and equality, data protection, and effective communication. This article delves into the quintessential elements that empower employers to navigate complexities, promote ethical practices, and cultivate a legally compliant workplace conducive to growth and prosperity.

EMPLOYMENT LAWS

Employment Laws are the rules that dictate how businesses must treat their employees. These rules vary depending on where you operate, from your local community to the broader world. In the UK and Ireland, they cover essential aspects like how much you must pay employees (minimum wage), how long they can work (working hours), and what happens when they work extra (overtime).

These laws also emphasise treating everyone fairly, preventing unfair treatment based on factors like gender, race, or religion (discrimination). They prohibit harmful behaviours like bullying or unwanted advances (harassment). Knowing and following these rules is crucial. It helps prevent legal troubles and ensures employees are treated justly and respectfully.

WORKPLACE SAFETY

Workplace safety is about keeping your employees safe and healthy while on the job. It's a big deal because it's not just about avoiding accidents – it's also about creating a positive work environment. To do this, you must follow the government's safety rules. These rules tell you what you need to do to keep everyone safe. It means checking for possible dangers and taking steps to fix them (risk assessments).

You must also teach your employees to stay safe and give them the right gear to do their jobs safely (training and protective equipment). A safe workplace boosts happiness, lowers accidents, and helps avoid legal problems.

DIVERSITY AND EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

Equal Opportunity and Diversity means treating everyone fairly and respecting differences. It's like ensuring all your employees get a fair chance to do well, no matter who they are. Employers should ensure fairness when hiring new people, picking who gets promotions, and how you run things every day. It's also about ensuring that nobody is treated less favourable because of a protected characteristic such as race, gender, religion etc.

When you do this, you create a workplace where everyone feels valued and included. This doesn't just feel good – it also improves your business by bringing in different ideas and making people more excited to work together.

FIVE THINGS EVERY EMPLOYER SHOULD BE AWARE OF

DATA PROTECTION AND PRIVACY

Data Protection and Privacy are about keeping personal information safe. It's like locking a treasure chest to ensure only the right people can access it. There are rules, like the GDPR, that say how you should handle this treasure chest of information.

You need to ensure employees are aware of the reasons why you are collecting and processing their information. Every employer should have a clear data protection policy and privacy statement which is distributed to all employees.

EMPLOYEE COMMUNICATION AND ENGAGEMENT

Employee Engagement and Communication is about talking and listening to your employees. Imagine having a team where everyone knows what's happening and feels comfortable sharing ideas. To make this happen, keep your team in the loop with news about the company, its plans, and the rules. But it's not just talking – it's also about listening.

When your employees have questions or problems, you should be ready to answer and solve them quickly. When people feel heard and understood, they feel more excited to do their jobs well. This positive energy boosts productivity and makes the workplace better for everyone.

MANAGING HR DOCUMENTATION FOR A REMOTE AND HYBRID WORKFORCE

Human Resources (HR) emerges as a pivotal force, shaping the success and sustainability of modern organisations. As teams become increasingly dispersed and work arrangements evolve, HR plays a fundamental role in ensuring seamless operations, fostering employee engagement, and maintaining a cohesive corporate culture.

The importance of HR in these contexts lies in its capacity to adapt traditional practices to fit the unique challenges of remote work and hybrid work, such as creating effective communication strategies, designing remote-friendly policies, and facilitating virtual onboarding processes. Moreover, HR professionals act as navigators, guiding companies through the intricacies of legal compliance across different regions and jurisdictions.

Their strategic involvement contributes to sustaining a harmonious and productive work environment transcending physical boundaries, ultimately positioning organisations to thrive in remote and hybrid work.

What are HR Documentation Templates for Remote and Hybrid Workforces?

HR form templates explicitly designed to address the unique requirements of employees working remotely or in hybrid workforces are pre-designed documents explicitly tailored for them. These templates cover an array of HR processes, from onboarding and performance reviews to leave requests and equipment procurement.

Crafted to meet the challenges of remote and hybrid work arrangements, these templates ensure seamless communication, standardised procedures, and compliance with legal and regulatory frameworks across diverse geographical locations.

How HR Documentation Templates Streamline Remote and Hybrid Workforces

HR documentation templates are invaluable for remote and hybrid organisations, streamlining operations and fostering consistency in diverse work environments. These templates provide a structured foundation for essential HR processes, from onboarding remote employees to establishing clear remote work policies.

By offering customisable templates tailored to specific scenarios and jurisdictions, HR documentation templates ensure compliance with legal requirements and industry standards, even across distributed teams. They expedite administrative tasks, allowing HR teams/line managers to allocate more time to strategic initiatives and employee support.

Moreover, these templates enhance communication by providing standardised materials that bridge the gap between remote employees and the organisation, cultivating a sense of unity and shared understanding. In remote and hybrid work, HR documentation templates emerge as essential tools, promoting efficiency, compliance, and a cohesive employee experience.

BREDA'S EMPLOYMENT LAW TIPS

DEALING WITH SICKNESS ABSENCE

A quarter of employers have seen an increase in staff being absent as a result of sickness compared to a year ago, according to a survey carried out by YouGov in the UK. This survey found that 26% of employers had seen an increase in sickness absence.

We recommend that employers have a robust policy and procedure for dealing with absence to ensure that any disruption to the business is minimised. However, a policy alone is not enough it is essential that line managers are trained to deal with sickness absence appropriately.

Top Tips for managing absence:

- Ensure that you have a robust policy in place which clearly outlines the expectation of managers and employees when dealing with sickness.
- The policy should define what is considered long and short-term absence by the organisation.
- It is recommended that trigger points are implemented for managing short term absence.
- Implement return to work interviews after every spell of absence.
- Have a culture where staff feel they can raise an issue and have it dealt with in a supportive manner.
- Have a procedure for managing the causes of absence such as deal such as work-related stress.
